Gallagher is the 6th generation of an Irish farming family, he now farms rice and walnuts in Yuba County. The Association, represented by President/CEO Roger Isom, Director of Technical Service Chris McGlothlin and Director of Regulatory Affairs Jodi Raley, took the Assemblyman to various agricultural operations within the Central Valley including a visit to Westside Farmers Co-Op Gin and a nearby cotton field. Other stops included Sozinho Dairy, a Fresno citrus orchard, Fowler Packing Co. and Central California Almond Growers. The Association and the industry representatives discussed issues including federal water allocation, the need for major above-ground storage project construction and labor issues throughout the day long tour. This tour was done in part of the Association’s effort to educate legislators of the issues specific to California cotton production.

The work of the crop teams and the emergence of the new online Decision Support Tools have cultivated new information.
that can be accessed easier by growers and PCA’s to determine best management tools whether it is biological or chemical controls or a combination of the two. The latter half of the meeting was a regulatory update from California Department of Pesticide Regulation, Natural Resources Conservation Service and the Fresno County Agricultural Commissioner’s Office. Fresno County has not set “permitted conditions” for Chlorpyrifos Lorsban (listed as a restricted use material July 1, 2015) and is advising growers and applicators to follow label instructions. Sixth Circuit Issues Stay on Federal Water Regulation
A federal appeals court issued a nationwide stay blocking the new Environmental Protection Agency regulation that seeks to expand the amount of water and wetlands under federal protection, known as “Water of the United States” or WOTUS. The Cincinnati-based U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, in a split ruling, said it was prudent to block the regulation while litigation continued over whether the Obama administration’s effort was legal. “A stay temporarily silences the whirlwind of confusion that springs from uncertainty about the requirements of the new rule and whether they will survive legal testing,” the court said. Previously, a federal judge in August blocked the rule in 13 states that had challenged it in a federal court in North Dakota, saying those states were likely to succeed in their lawsuit against the regulation. In coordination with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the EPA in May issued the rule, which is estimated to put about 3% more waterways throughout the U.S. under new federal jurisdiction, which would require a federal permit to pollute those waters and... could restrict access altogether. Major waterways, like most rivers and lakes, are already under protection of the Clean Water Act and aren’t affected by the rule. The EPA has said the rule is necessary to clarify which waters should fall under the protection of the federal Clean Water Act of 1972 after two Supreme Court rulings, in 2001 and 2006, called into question whether and to what extent 60% of U.S. waterways, especially streams and wetlands, should fall under federal jurisdiction.

On this trip, the Assemblyman visited a dairy, milk processor, a cotton gin and also met with a cotton and pistachio grower southwest of Tulare. Water and regulatory impacts were among the topics covered. Assemblyman Mathis is the Vice chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee and also sits on the Agriculture, Aging and Long Term Care, and Water, Parks and Wildlife Committees. Accompanying the Assemblyman on the tour was the Association’s President/CEO Roger Isom.

CCGGA Staff Visit with Urban Legislators

CCGGA staff including President/CEO Roger Isom and Director of Regulatory Affairs Jodi Raley, visited with Assemblywoman Jacqui Irwin and Assemblyman Adrin Nazarian in Los Angeles along with other leaders of California agricultural commodity groups. On the first day of the two day tour, guests visited agricultural operations within Assemblywoman Irwin’s district including a strawberry ranch, a lemon handling/processing facility, a fresh cut flower operation and saw a demonstration of a helicopter aerial application. This portion of the tour served as a great educational opportunity for representatives of other commodities but additionally educated Assemblyman Nazarian on the bounty of agriculture outside of his district and the issues the industry faces. On the second day, Assemblyman Nazarian showed APC members what industries make his district thrive and the initiatives he’s working on as the district’s representative. Fueled largely by the entertainment industry, tour guests met with executives of Universal Studios, LA Department of Water and Power, Salmi Studios and the Bureau of Sanitation’s water reclamation facility and Japanese Garden feature. The trip served as an opportunity for urban legislators to learn of the agriculture industry’s struggles and for the agriculture industry to better understand the pressures of representing an urban district.
